SAINTS AND CHURCH SPACES IN THE LATE ANTIQUE MEDITERRANEAN

This book explores the intersection between two key developments of the fourth to seventh centuries CE: the construction of monumental churches and the veneration of saints. While Christian sacred topographies are usually interpreted in narrowly religious terms as points of contact with holy places and people, this book considers church buildings as spatial environments in which a range of social “work” happened. It draws on approaches developed in the fields of anthropology, ritual studies, and social geography to examine, for example, how church buildings facilitated commemoration of the community’s dead, establishment of a shared historical past, and communication with the divine. Surveying evidence for the introduction of saints into liturgical performance and the architectural and decorative programs of churches, Professor Yasin’s analysis explains how saints helped to bolster the boundaries of church space, reinforce local social and religious hierarchies, and negotiate the community’s place within larger regional and cosmic networks.

Ann Marie Yasin is Associate Professor in the Departments of Classics and Art History at the University of Southern California. She held a two-year Rome Prize Fellowship in the School of Classical Studies at the American Academy in Rome from 1999 to 2001 and was named a Fellow in Byzantine Studies at Dumbarton Oaks in Washington, D.C. for spring 2006.
GREEK CULTURE IN THE ROMAN WORLD

Editors
SUSAN E. ALCOCK, Brown University

SIMON GOLDFILL, University of Cambridge

The Greek culture of the Roman Empire offers a rich field of study. Extraordinary insights can be gained into processes of multicultural contact and exchange, political and ideological conflict, and the creativity of a changing, polyglot empire. During this period, many fundamental elements of Western society were being set in place: from the rise of Christianity, to an influential system of education, to long-lived artistic canons. This series is the first to focus on the response of Greek culture to its Roman imperial setting as a significant phenomenon in its own right. To this end, it will publish original and innovative research in the art, archaeology, epigraphy, history, philosophy, religion, and literature of the empire, with an emphasis on Greek material.

This book is very much a product of many intellectual influences and conversation partners in my life. Its “pre-history” can be traced to my undergraduate experiences at the University of Michigan where, through courses and archaeological fieldwork, I became fascinated by the study of the past through the traces left behind. I continue to be particularly grateful to David Mattingly, Andrew Kosak, Elaine Gazda, Elizabeth Sears, John Humphrey, David Stone, and Lea Stirling for encouraging my pursuits and passing on something of their own excitement and curiosity for material and visual culture.

The work I did as a graduate student on subjects that would lead to this project bears the indelible stamp of my teachers and colleagues at the University of Chicago. I am profoundly indebted to the stimulating interdisciplinary environment in which I found myself immersed there, especially the rich communities fostered by the Departments of Art History and Classics and the Ancient Societies and Late Antique and Byzantine Workshops. For challenging me with difficult questions and inspiring me by their example, I continue to be grateful to my dissertation committee Rob Nelson, Gloria Pinney, and Linda Seidel. In addition, Walter Kaegi, Jonathan Hall, Chris Faraone, Richard Saller, Ingrid Rowland, and the late Michael Camille offered invaluable support and guidance.

The project has also been shaped by my experiences at the American Academy in Rome as a pre-doctoral fellow from 1999–2001 and as Fellow in Byzantine Studies at Dumbarton Oaks in the spring of 2006. I am grateful to both of these institutions for supporting my work and to the individuals who made those years so productive and richly rewarding. For the many conversations and exchanges in Rome and Washington that helped me explore and articulate various aspects of this work particular thanks are due to Margaret (Peg) Laird, Celina Gray, Elizabeth Fentress, Leslie Dossey, Susan T. Stevens, Bill Stull, Lauren Hackworth Peterson, John Bodel, Frederick Brenk, Yoram Tsafir, Elen Deming, Deborah Brown Stewart, Alice-Mary Talbot, Kyle Harper, and Paroma Chatterjee.

Over the years, many other friends and colleagues have contributed to the shape of the project and helped to focus my own thinking. I have profited immensely from the critical feedback and generous time offered by... those who have read the whole project at one stage or another. I owe special thanks in this regard to Peter Brown, Richard Kieckhefer, Morton Richter, and Tom Habinek, as well as to Series Editors Jas Elsner, Susan Alcock, and Simon Goldhill, the anonymous reviewers, and Cambridge University Press Senior Editor for Classics and Byzantine Studies, Michael Sharp. My current and former colleagues at the University of Southern California and Northwestern University have provided me with warmly supportive and intellectually challenging environments in which to work. Megan O’Neill, Sean Roberts, Victoria Cain, Anne McKnight, Daniela Bleichmar, Charles King, and Claudia Swan read and commented on various sections. Cecily Hilsdale’s help and encouragement has affected the work in tangible and intangible ways too numerous to count. I am also very thankful for the valuable suggestions and questions that have come from stimulating and enjoyable exchanges with Claudia Rapp, Holger Klein, Franz Alto Bauer, Kostis Kourelis, Bob Ousterhout, Galina Tiranico, Glenn Peers, Tina Sessa, Kim Bowes, Suzanne Wertheim, Sarah Fraser, Alison Poe, Bill Caraher, Amy Papalexandrou, Lisa Bitel, Peter Mancall, Dina Boero, and Greg Thalmann. I am also grateful for the opportunities I have had to share my work on this project in a number of different venues. The questions and comments raised by audiences at various lectures and conferences have helped me see new connections and brought additional issues and evidence to my attention.

Research and travel funding to Tunisia, Italy, Greece, Croatia, Turkey, Egypt, Jordan, and Syria was provided by faculty development and research grants from Northwestern University and the University of Southern California, and the Edward L. Ryerson Fellowship in Archaeology from the University of Chicago. Among those who went out of their way to help me with advice on travel and conducting research in these various countries and/or with assistance in gaining access to sites and materials, special mention must be made of Kristin Collins, Father Justin Sinai, and the other members of the monastic community at St. Catherine’s at Mount Sinai, Anne Coulson, James Terry, Anton Bammer, Hilke Thür, Norbert Zimmermann, Renate Pillinger, Charalambos Bakirtzis, Demetra Papanikola-Bakirtzis, Ann Steinsapir, Lynn Swartz Dodd, Anne Porter, Marilyn Kelly-Boucellati, Barbara Porter and the rest of the staff at the American Center for Oriental Research in Amman. I also owe a special debt of gratitude to Widad Khoury and Ihsan Ishaq whose expertise and generosity illuminated numerous aspects of Roman and early Christian Syria for me.

In researching this project, I have also had the privilege to consult the collections of numerous libraries and museums; for their generosity and assistance, I am particularly thankful to the staffs of the libraries of the University of Chicago, the American Academy in Rome, the École française de Rome, the Deutsches Archäologisches Institut in Rome, the Universität Heidelberg, the British School at Athens, Princeton University, Northwestern University, Dumbarton Oaks, the Getty Research Institute and Villa, the University of California Los Angeles, and the University of Southern California.

I am grateful for help in the preparation of the manuscript from research assistants Kristina Meinking and Erika Carbonell, and thanks to John (Mac) Marston for his wonderful work preparing the map and line drawings. I have been assisted by all the publishers and institutions who have granted permission to reproduce their images in this book, and I especially want to thank Charlotte Roueché, James Conlon of the Visual Media Center of Columbia University, Gerrianne Schaad of the Image Collections and Fieldwork Archives at Dumbarton Oaks, and Amalia Kakissis, Archivist for the British School at Athens, for their assistance and generosity.

I would never have begun down this path, nor pursued it as far as I have, without the unflagging support of my parents, Tom and Annette Yasin.

My husband and colleague, Danny Richter, has seen me through the thick and thin of this project from start to finish. Since our first year in graduate school he has been my constant friend, partner, traveling companion, interlocutor, and cheer-leader. To him, with all my love, I dedicate this book.
Abbreviations of titles of ancient works and of authors’ names correspond to those used in the Oxford Classical Dictionary and the Patristic Greek Lexicon.
