Executive Summary

As part of its Congressionally mandated mission, the Blue Ridge Parkway should "conserve, interpret, and exhibit the unique natural and cultural resources of the central and southern Appalachian Mountains.” Oral history research helps the Blue Ridge Parkway to complete this mission by providing first-hand testimony of the lives of people who sustain the local culture of the region. Thus, on-going oral history research should be central to the mission of the Blue Ridge Parkway. The project reported on here provides a foundation for that on-going research by providing a series of interviews that speak to key cultural and historical themes related to the Blue Ridge Parkway, and by detailing three logistical recommendations to implement such a program:

- Build capacity to conduct and archive oral history interviews by purchasing digital recorders with funding provided by the Blue Ridge Parkway Foundation;
- Encourage community-level involvement in oral history research as part of the Blue Ridge Parkway’s on-going connection with local people; and
- Disseminate results of oral history research through audio programs at Visitors Centers, as digital audio for listening while driving the Parkway, and in other venues.

These recommendations not only support the Blue Ridge Parkway’s mission of conserving, interpreting and exhibiting the cultural resources of the southern Appalachian mountains, but they also help to develop collaborative relationships with the traditionally associated people who are the focus of the Ethnographic Overview and Assessment that is a continuation of this project.

I. Introduction

The 469-mile Blue Ridge Parkway crosses 34 counties in two states. It connects cities, towns, rural areas, National Forests and two heavily visited National Parks. It preserves structures, sites and landscapes that evoke historical eras stretching back from recent times to the Depression, the Civil War, the Colonial period and previous American Indian epochs. No single narrative can summarize the culture and history that the Blue Ridge Parkway preserves and interprets, despite past attempts to narrowly focus on "pioneer culture."

Oral history is particularly suited for capturing the great diversity of stories associated with the Blue Ridge Parkway. The technique of recording and transcribing interviews "on subjects of historical interest about which the narrator can speak with authority" (Baum 1970 in Martin 1995: 4) has been used to document all kinds of people in the United States. Early oral history projects focused on recording the memories of powerful elites in order to get their insiders' point-of-view on significant historical events. But with the work of the WPA Federal Writer's Project, it soon became apparent that the techniques of oral history could be used to document the lives of those who might not otherwise become a part of the historical record. As pointed out in a recent appraisal of oral history research in the national parks, oral history is “a unique resource that has given a voice to those who were frequently overlooked in the past such as women, minorities, immigrants, and the disenfranchised, and it incorporates everyday life experiences into the written record" (http://www.cr.nps.gov/history/oh/oral.htm). The Blue Ridge Parkway Oral History Project discussed in this report includes interviews with both relatively powerful insiders as well as with the overlooked and "everyday."

The goal of this project has been to let people speak for themselves and tell their own stories. In so doing, a number of common themes emerged. These themes are: 1) The initial vision of “parkways” in the United States; 2) The emergence of “Appalachian studies” and its challenge to old Parkway-promoted stereotypes about local people; 3) Mabry Mill; 4) The Blue Ridge Music Center; 5) and local “traditionally associated people” and their associated “ethnographic resources” (some of which might also be eligible for designation as “traditional cultural properties”) including the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians and early environmentalist groups who initially encouraged the National Parks movement of which the Blue Ridge Parkway is one outcome. The oral history collections of the Blue Ridge Parkway were also catalogued as part of this research (as part of Task Report #2), and a number of other oral history archives in the region were consulted. Taken together, these oral history materials not only help us to interpret the culture of the region that the Blue Ridge Parkway represents, but they also help us to do it in compelling and culturally significant ways that make sense to local people themselves. They also shed light on resource management and maintenance issues faced by the Blue Ridge Parkway, issues that many local people see as important aspects of their personal lives on a day-to-day basis.

The most significant contribution of this project is to provide good-quality recordings of the actual voices of people telling their stories. The practice of recording people in the Blue Ridge Mountains is older than the Blue Ridge Parkway itself. Cecil Sharp (1967) and the ballad-collecting "song-catchers" that followed him were among the first -- and certainly the most influential -- to use recording devices for academic research in the United States. Audio recordings thus have a particular relevance as an interpretive tool for the Blue Ridge Parkway. It is hoped that this report will set the stage for a revaluation of the importance of oral history research by the Blue Ridge Parkway.

The Blue Ridge Parkway Oral History Project was managed administratively through a CESU agreement between the National Park Service (Southeastern Regional Office) and Western Carolina University. Throughout the project, the Principal Investigator was in regular communication with Blue Ridge Parkway staff, who worked closely with the Principal Investigator as the project unfolded.
II. Methods

This project collected interviews from people contacted using a "documented networks" approach. The documented networks approach has four steps: 1) develop an initial list of key consultants based on willingness to participate and locale; 2) identify a secondary list of consultants by asking consultants from the initial list about others to be interviewed; 3) collect information on how these others are related or connected with the original consultants, and the reasons they were mentioned; 4) repeat the process with the secondary consultants to identify still others (http://www.cr.nps.gov/ethnography/training/elCamino/phase1.htm).

In the case of the Blue Ridge Parkway Oral History Project, the initial consultants were contacted by talking with knowledgeable local people, many of whom are or were employees of the Blue Ridge Parkway. Contact information supplied by BLRI Management Assistant Laura Rotegard, who had previously worked as a Community Liaison, was particularly valuable. I also reviewed archival information and previous interviews in Park collections, as called for in the Scope of Work, but found this information to be less useful. Some initial contacts developed fortuitously during driving tours.

The interviews conducted as part of this research were approximately one-hour long, usually recorded in the homes or offices of the consultants, or occasionally in public libraries or other quiet public places. During my first interviewing trip to Floyd, Virginia, I used a Sony Pressman cassette recorder. Four interviews (Mary Cockram, Kris Hodges and Erika Johnson, Stan Hawley, and Virgil Lilly) were conducted with this lower-quality recorder. Shortly after that first trip I purchased a Marantz PMD-430 cassette recorder with an Audio-technical stereo microphone, which produced very high-quality recordings. All of these cassette-recorded interviews were subsequently digitized using Protools L.E. audio software. The cassette recorder was plugged into the Protools audio-interface ("M-box"), producing digital files (either wav. or mp3) that were then burned to compact disks. Additionally, each of the cassettes was copied to a second cassette for transcription purposes. Thus, for each of the interviews an original cassette, a transcription cassette and a CD-copy of the interview were produced.

Although my intent was to focus on the Blue Ridge Parkway in all of the interviews, my questions were open-ended and ethnographic, rather than focused on a particular survey instrument or set of specific questions. Typically I would open with a general "grand-tour" (Spradley 1979) question like: "tell me about your background" or "tell me about your work for the Blue Ridge Parkway." I would then listen for emotions in the interview subject’s response and follow up with an open-ended request for a discussion of that particular topic: "tell me about that home place," for example. This approach was very successful at eliciting stories and comments about aspects of people's lives that were meaningful to them. It produced dozens of broadcast-quality reminiscences that should serve as the basis for an on-going Blue Ridge Parkway oral history program.
At the conclusion of each interview, a Deed of Gift form was signed by the interviewee and by the interviewer. In a few cases, this form was signed at a later time. In one case an interview subject refused to sign the Deed of Gift form because of some of the comments about local people that she made and so this interview was expunged from the project.

With one exception, the Principal Investigator conducted all of the interviews. However, during the course of this project a number of students at Western Carolina University worked with the Principal Investigator to do archival research, transcribe interviews, and accompany the Principal Investigator on interviewing trips. These students included: Sam Morgan, Travis Bugg, Amber Griffen, Tonya Teague, and Jamie Patterson. Sam Morgan helped to sort through materials in the BLRI archives. Travis Bugg transcribed interviews. Amber Griffen transcribed interviews, collected information at regional archives and accompanied the Principal Investigator on a field-trip to Galax. Tonya Teague conducted one interview (with Richard Sullins), transcribed a number of interviews, and accompanied the Principal Investigator on several field-trips. Finally, Jamie Patterson transcribed a number of interviews. All of the interviews were logged, transcribed, printed on acid-free paper and copied to 3.5" floppy disks. The Principal Investigator checked each of the logs and transcriptions for accuracy. Forty-nine manila envelopes containing interview material were personally delivered to the Blue Ridge Parkway’s Curator for permanent archiving at a meeting at the Blue Ridge Headquarters in Asheville on October 19th, 2005. Subsequently, a letter was sent to each of the interviewees from the Principal Investigator informing them of the successful archiving of their interview with the BLRI (see Appendix C for a copy of such a letter).
III. Activities

Although a series of one-hour recorded interviews is the primary product of this oral history project, a number of other activities were completed so that these interviews might serve as a foundation for future Blue Ridge Parkway oral history research and interpretation.

During Fall and Winter 2002, the principal investigator worked in the newly completed Blue Ridge Parkway archives compiling the catalogue that became the basis of Task Report #2. Additionally, other oral history archives were surveyed (although this was beyond the Scope of Work of the project) and the Principal Investigator spent several days consulting with Management Assistant Laura Rotegard in order to become familiar with the community projects that she had undertaken as a Community Liaison.

In the Spring of 2003 the Principal Investigator pursued information about the Blue Ridge Parkway Folklife Project, the largest previous interviewing project associated with the Blue Ridge Parkway. A duplicate set of recordings and slides had been copied for the Blue Ridge Parkway, but these materials were not located in the archives. A catalogue of this projects materials (now available on-line: http://www.loc.gov/folklife/guides/blueridge.html) was obtained during this time. These interviews are available to the public, but subject to the management policies of the Library of Congress.

In the Summer and Fall of 2003 the Principal Investigator focused on interviewing and transcription, producing much of the material included in this report.

In the Winter of 2004 the Principal Investigator engaged in correspondence with Larry Van Horne of the NPS Denver Office, who was working on the General Management Plan for the Parkway. I completed a number of “driving interviews” with BLRI employees in order to seek additional information for his research.

In the Spring of 2004 the Principal Investigator encouraged a number of students in a Folklore class at Western Carolina University to produce profiles of some of the individuals that had been previously interviewed. These profiles were put on a web-page accessed through my academic department’s web-site (http://www.wcu.edu/as/anthro_soc/Ethno/oralhistories.htm), and one of them (on Parkway neighbor Louise Hepler) was published in the Blue Ridge Parkway’s Milepost, a copy of which is attached in Appendix D. During this semester the Principal Investigator also began a Folklife Series at WCU’s Mountain Heritage Center that featured people met during research for this project. In December, 2005 this performance and lecture series completed its second year.

In the Summer of 2004 the Principal Investigator was encouraged by Regional Ethnographer Anthony Paredes to postpone work on this project in order to work with Alan Jabbour and Paul Webb on a Traditional Cultural Properties study for the Great Smoky Mountains National Park North Shore Road EIS. This project engaged much of the Principal Researcher’s time until the following Spring of 2005, but transcription continued and a few interviews were completed during this period.

Finally, in the Spring and Summer of 2005 the Principal Investigator completed research for the Blue Ridge Parkway Oral History Project by conducting a series of oral history workshops at five different Parkway locations (WCU’s Mountain Heritage Center, Asheville’s Folk Art Center, Floyd’s Public Library, Brinegar Cabin Days and Sparta’s Public Library). These workshops were meant to promote oral history as a uniquely “Blue Ridge Parkway” endeavor that local people can contribute to through their own oral history projects. This series of workshops also helped to generate contacts with local people along the Parkway in order to deepen subsequent research for the Blue Ridge Parkway Ethnographic Overview and Assessment.
IV. Findings

The story of the building of the Blue Ridge Parkway has been deepened in recent years by the work of historian Anne Mitchell (1997), who focuses on the political intrigues involved in routing the Parkway, and on the unequal benefits of the Parkway to business interests rather than the poor families that New Deal programs were supposed to help. Her approach challenges the work of long-time Parkway historian Harley Jolley (1969), who emphasizes the positive aspects of Parkway construction as a make-work economic relief project. But other stories much more central to the mission of the National Park Service are also revealed by interviews conducted as part of this project. These stories center around the following interpretive themes: 1) The initial vision of “parkways” in the United States; 2) The emergence of “Appalachian studies” and its challenge to old Parkway-promoted stereotypes about local people; 3) Mabry Mill; 4) The Blue Ridge Music Center; 5) and local “traditionally associated people” and their associated “ethnographic resources,” including the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians and early environmentalists who encouraged the National Parks movement of which the Blue Ridge Parkway is one outcome.

The development of “parkways” as part of the emergent discipline of landscape architecture in the early part of the 20th century offered a unique vision of a new kind of relationship between nature and culture at a time that Depression-era Americans were questioning the social and environmental effects of industrialization. Neither wilderness-oriented “National Park” nor industrially oriented thoroughfare, parkways were meant to blend the best aspects of both the city and the country. Blue Ridge Parkway designer Stanley Abbott and his team were immersed in this tradition of landscape architecture with its roots in the work of Frederick Law Olmsted. Interviews with Carlton Abbott, the son and landscape-architectural protégé of Stanley Abbott, and David Hill, a Roanoke-based landscape architect who has worked to extend Stanley Abbott’s vision as urban and suburban developments have increasingly encroached on Abbott’s original viewsheds, provide a basis for linking the original concept of the Blue Ridge Parkway with contemporary environmental concerns. This interpretive theme is also deepened by interviews with people like Virgil Lilly, Don Richardson and Robert Barrus who worked as laborers to landscape the Blue Ridge Parkway.

This goal of understanding the particular vision of the Blue Ridge Parkway as part of the New Deal’s search for a “third way” out of the Depression between Communism and Fascism that would more harmoniously integrate newly emergent cities with the countryside from which American culture was formed also historically contextualizes the image of “Appalachia” that has long been promoted by the Blue Ridge Parkway. This image has been challenged by the rise of “Appalachian Studies,” which seeks to move beyond simplistic portrayals of “log-cabin pioneers” to more nuanced and realistic portrayals of the diverse peoples of the Blue Ridge mountains. The story of this shift in perspective is documented through interviews with Blue Ridge Parkway interpretive staff, including Patty Lockamy, Phil Noblitt, and Jackie Holt, as well as with folklorists Joe Wilson, Alan Jabbour and Carl Fleischhauer. These interviews allow us to recognize the changing population of the Blue Ridge mountains and so distinguish their actual histories from the overly romantic (or overly debased) images promoted in the past by the Blue Ridge Parkway.

By clearly distinguishing the images of mountain people as promoted in the past by the Blue Ridge Parkway from the actual histories of these people, the Blue Ridge Parkway is finding new ways to interpret iconic sites, like Mabry Mill, and fundamental cultural themes, like mountain music. Interviews with Mabry Mill demonstration blacksmiths Virgil Lilly and Stan Hawley emphasized the economic decisions made by mountain entrepreneurs like Ed Mabry. Thus, behind the designed image of an environmentally benign primitive industry is a human story of hard work and a man’s practical intelligence within the historical context of our industrializing nation’s first boom and bust. Both are compelling stories, but they should be clearly distinguished.

Similarly, the actual story of the development of mountain music is easily confused with the designed image of misty log cabins nestled in isolated mountain valleys. Thus, mountain music is seen as a product of idle hours spent passing time on remote homesteads. However, interviews with Wayne Henderson, Tom Barr, Amanda Wright and Bobby Patterson all point to the intrinsically social nature of mountain music. Mountain people have never been isolated from each other. Indeed, mountain life has always been family and community oriented. Mountain music has also incorporated a variety of styles and instruments, making it a uniquely American art form that continues to change and evolve in a number of different ways as musicians, dancers and those sitting off-to-the-side seek beauty, meaning and good times through a home-grown, face-to-face musical tradition.

Of course, it would not do to simply discard the images of Appalachia that the Blue Ridge Parkway has previously promoted in favor of “objective” history and culture. Instead, these images need to be interpreted within their specific historical contexts. Indeed, some of these images, like Stanley Abbott’s vision of a harmoniously integrated city and countryside, still have relevance today. But there does need to be a rebalancing so that the actual cultures of the region are understood as interesting in their own right. The National Park Service’s increasing concern to interpret the lives of “traditionally associated people” who have previous ties to lands now incorporated into parks is amply represented in interviews conducted as part of this project.

Don Richardson, Mary Cockram, Louise Hepler, and enrolled Eastern Band of Cherokee Indian members Tommy Cabe and Laura Powell all spoke movingly about the connection of long-time traditionally associated people to the Blue Ridge Parkway. These interviews point out the problem of creating a false, but perhaps bureaucratically convenient, distinction between “interpretation,” “resource,” and “maintenance” in the way that the National Park Service works with neighbors in specific National Park Service units like the Blue Ridge Parkway. Local traditionally associated people are involved with the Blue Ridge Parkway in all facets of their lives. They baptize their children in its creeks. They have grown up in homes now owned by the Blue Ridge Parkway. They gather spring greens on lands adjacent to the Blue Ridge Parkway (and previously on land now owned by the Blue Ridge Parkway). They raise crops and livestock on agricultural leases. They work directly for the Blue Ridge Parkway as maintenance workers and other staff members. They pray at churches next to the Blue Ridge Parkway. And they are buried in cemeteries on Blue Ridge Parkway land. The testimonies of the traditionally associated people interviewed as part of this project provide insights for administrative decision-making in all facets of the Blue Ridge Parkway’s operation. The Blue Ridge Parkway Ethnographic Overview and Assessment, for which work has already begun, will extend these findings by focusing even more directly on the experiences and insights of these traditionally associated people.
V. Recommendations

Oral history has been a part of the history and culture of the Blue Ridge Mountains since the time of Cecil Sharp and the other early ballad collectors, and so oral history research should be part of the mission of the Blue Ridge Parkway today. Visitors to the Blue Ridge Parkway make emotional connections to the nostalgic scenes designed by Parkway planners, but this sense of nostalgia for a way-of-life gone-by should be complemented by an intellectually rigorous and systematically organized oral history program that captures the voices of actual people in the present. These people speak of their own histories, their own memories of times in the Blue Ridge Mountains. Visitors expect that the Blue Ridge Parkway should be at the forefront of oral history research, that each of the log cabins, rail fences and old farms should have stories archived with them. They expect that the old people of the Blue Ridge Mountains who are passing away should be recorded, and their memories preserved. Of course, many of these expectations are unrealistic given the budgetary constraints of the National Park Service. But the following three recommendations could help the Blue Ridge Parkway to lead the way towards a new appreciation of oral history research in the Blue Ridge Mountains: 1) build capacity; 2) encourage community-level involvement; and 3) disseminate results.

The first recommendation of this report is that the Blue Ridge Parkway builds capacity to conduct oral history research. Building capacity for oral history research requires limited funding for equipment, as well as a renewed emphasis on the need to conduct oral history interviews by BLRI staff, seasonal rangers and cooperating researchers. Currently the Blue Ridge Parkway has essentially no capacity to record interviews. Thus, several digital recorders should be purchased. Currently, professional-quality Marantz PMD-670 digital recorders sell for approximately $600. With a good quality microphone and extra digital memory cards the total price of such recorders would be $750 each. One of these recorders should be purchased for each of the four ranger districts of the Blue Ridge Parkway. The Blue Ridge Parkway Foundation would be a good source of funding for these recorders. This source of funding would also allow these recorders to be purchased in advance of the 2006 summer visitor season. The Curator of the Blue Ridge Parkway should be responsible for these recorders. At the beginning of each summer season these recorders should be transferred to District-level interpretive staff as part of the Seasonal Interpretive Staff orientation sessions, which should include a four-hour session on conducting oral history research. As part of the Curator’s end-of-season retrieval of museum artifacts, this staff-person should also collect the audio files and brief recording-logs that have been generated by NPS staff during the summer. Complete transcripts would be finished as possible, but would be project dependent. Until such transcripts were needed, a log of each interview would be sufficient to indicate the types and quality of information included in each recording. Of course, recording equipment should also be available to BLRI staff during the off-season, but this availability would need to be made by specific arrangement with the BLRI Curator. The key issue is that each season’s recording be stored in the central archive of the Blue Ridge Parkway, rather than at dispersed Ranger District offices.
The second recommendation of this report is that oral history research be seen as part of the Blue Ridge Parkway’s mission to involve local communities in its activities. Indeed, oral history interviews should be seen as part of a larger process of involving local communities – particularly “traditionally associated people” and their “ethnographic resources” and “traditional cultural properties” – in the yearly practices of the Blue Ridge Parkway. Interview sessions can serve as an initial way to meet local people and learn about their concerns, and interviews can also set the stage for future collaborations. Project interviews with Bill Carson, Don Richardson and Louise Hepler serve as models for this process of community involvement.

Bill Carson, the owner of the Orchard at Altapass, had previously worked with Community Liaison Laura Rotegard in completing an ethnographically oriented project at his home community of Little Switzerland. She gave his contact information to the Principal Investigator who then conducted an interview with him at the orchard, which Mr. Carson has also developed into a cultural center for the Spruce Pine area. As a result of this interview the Principal Investigator invited Mr. Carson to give a story-telling performance about the Over Mountain Trail at Western Carolina University’s Mountain Heritage Center. Mr. Carson then invited the P.I. to conduct interviews at an oral history event sponsored by the Blue Ridge Parkway Foundation at the Orchard at Altapass. Subsequently, a student from Western Carolina University’s History Department worked with Mr. Carson to do archival research related to Altapass history, which may in the future become an attraction for visitors to the Blue Ridge Parkway.

Don Richardson, a long-time pastor at the Saddle Mountain Union Baptist Church, had previously become known to BLRI Natural Resource Manager Bambi Teague as a result of a dispute between the church and the Blue Ridge Parkway over a creek used for baptisms. The Principal Researcher followed up on this contact, conducting an interview in Mr. Richardson’s home in which he emphasized the long history of positive relations between his church and the Parkway, and in which he expressed his appreciation for the work of BLRI administrators in mediating the previous dispute to everyone’s satisfaction. Mr. Richardson was subsequently contacted to participate in a public interview as part of the Plateau District’s Brinegar Cabin Days, during which Mr. Richardson spoke movingly of church history in the area. As a result of this interview, subsequent interviews were scheduled with members of the Alleghany County Historical and Genealogical Society and the Principal Investigator presented an oral history workshop for members of the group, who expressed their enthusiasm to continue working with the Blue Ridge Parkway on future events like Brinegar Cabin Days.

Louise Hepler is a local historian who lives adjacent to the Blue Ridge Parkway near Benge Gap and who is an active member of the Blue Ridge Baptist Church, which faces the Blue Ridge Parkway. The Principal Investigator happened to drive by this church while Mrs. Hepler and others were decorating the cemetery located between the church and the Parkway. After initiating a friendly conversation, the Principal Investigator arranged an interview at the home of Louise Hepler, who also subsequently introduced the Principal Investigator to Bill Watson, a long-time resident and country-store owner who lives at Benge Gap. The interview with Mrs. Hepler became the basis of an article in the Blue Ridge Parkway’s Milepost, written by a student of the Principal Investigator (see Appendix D). This article discussed a simmering conflict between the Blue Ridge Baptist Church and the Blue Ridge Parkway, and so served as a forum to begin negotiations about a significant management issue between the Blue Ridge Parkway and a group of traditionally associated people.

In all of these cases, oral history interviews were only one part of a larger process of community involvement. In this sense, the Blue Ridge Parkway Oral History Project should also be seen as the first phase in a larger effort to bring insights from the National Park Service’s Ethnography Program to the cultural research management and interpretation of the Blue Ridge Parkway. The second phase of this effort is the Blue Ridge Parkway Ethnographic Overview and Assessment, which was contracted to the Principal Investigator beginning June 1st, 2005. This second phase will focus more directly on identifying the traditionally associated peoples and ethnographic resources and traditional cultural properties of the Blue Ridge Parkway and so will also serve as a resource for future oral history efforts by seasonal and permanent employees of the Blue Ridge Parkway.

The third recommendation of this report is that the results of the Blue Ridge Parkway Oral History Project -- and future oral history research conducted by the Blue Ridge Parkway -- be disseminated to the public. The first goal of every oral history project should be to permanently archive good-quality recordings, but these recording should also be available for listening. Specifically, these recordings should be made accessible to the public in the following formats and/or venues: 1) the new Visitors Center in Asheville; 2) edited programs for listening while driving the Parkway; 3) the Parks-as-Classrooms program; and 4) an expanded BLRI web-site.

Over the past months (in the latter half of 2005) the Principal Investigator has been in contact with Carol Bossert, a contractor hired to develop the “script” for the planned Visitors Center to be located at the Blue Ridge Parkway Headquarters in Asheville. This script recommends an oral history listening area to be included in that Visitors Center. Such an oral history listening area would emphasize the importance of oral history to the mission of the Blue Ridge Parkway while also highlighting the actual voices of people of the region that the Blue Ridge Parkway represents.

Most people visit the Blue Ridge Parkway while driving in their automobiles, so oral history programs should be made available for them to listen to in their cars. Recently the Blue Ridge Parkway Driving Tour -- a CD overview of the Blue Ridge Parkway “told in the story-telling tradition of the mountain folk” -- was completed. However, this audio guide to the Blue Ridge Parkway does not include any voices of actual mountain people. The interviews completed as part of the Blue Ridge Parkway Oral History Project provide abundant material for the production of a CD or downloadable MP3 that could be listened to while driving on the Blue Ridge Parkway.

The Parks-as-Classrooms program has become very popular in recent years in schools around the Blue Ridge Parkway. In Virginia, and Appalachian Curriculum has been developed for this program. Oral history research and learning would fit within the History and Social Science Standards of Learning and would be of interest to Appalachian students, who may already be familiar with oral history research as a result of Foxfire-type student-oriented oral history projects in their communities (Day Hatton 2004).

Finally, the digitized oral history interviews conducted as part of this project should be made available to the public through an expanded Blue Ridge Parkway website. These digitized interviews could be made available from an interactive map of the Blue Ridge Parkway, such as has been conceived in conversations between the Principal Investigator and David Anderson, the Landscape Architect of the Blue Ridge Parkway. This website would feature a “zoom-able” topographic and aerial-photographic map of the Blue Ridge Parkway region with “hot buttons” on the relevant site associated with each oral history interview. Thus, Mabry Mill, for example, would have hot buttons that would bring up audio files of interviews with Stan Hawley and Virgil Lilly, demonstration blacksmiths at that site.

All of these recommendations are based on the idea that oral history research has long been a focus of Blue Ridge culture, so the Blue Ridge Parkway should be a leader in perpetuating this research as one part of the history and culture of the region that it represents.

Appendix C: Task Reports

Task Report #1
for the
Oral History Project Blue Ridge Parkway
(Cooperative Agreement H5000-02-0220)
Submitted by
Philip E. Coyle, Ph.D.
Contractor

This nine-page document completes Task #1 of Task Order #J5038-0200478, which was assigned as follows:

“The contractor will establish a timeline of when various communities, including unincorporated hamlets, along the Parkway were first exposed to the planning and construction of the various segments of the Parkway…The resulting scheme should be compatible with an existing classification of communities developed by the park as contained in Appendix III.”

This report provides the required timeline organized in terms the required scheme as well as a narrative overview of work completed as part of this task.

Narrative Overview

Local consultants--the people who volunteer to work with researchers in documenting their cultures--necessarily guide the direction of any ethnography. But in the case of Mary Cockram, I only partially agree with her perspective: "You're about ten years too late," she said. I was directed to Mrs. Cockram by Neal Baker, owner of the Tuggle's Gap Motel, who could point to her neighbor's old homeplace from the motel’s front desk. Mrs. Cockram’s father helped build the Parkway and worked as a maintenance man in the Rocky Knob area for thirty years. He had died two years earlier at the age of ninety-nine, accounting for Mrs. Cockram’s pessimistic appraisal of this research project. Although I convinced Mrs. Cockram to speak on tape about her father and about her own life growing up next to the Parkway, she made a good point. The people who lived at the time that the Parkway was being planned and built in the Floyd County area are either very old or have already passed away. Still, Mrs. Cockram herself did provide a very moving testimony about her family history and the following day I was able to interview Virgil Lilly, a lucid and articulate CCC veteran who had recently turned eighty-two. Thus, it is not too late to undertake this project--as Mrs. Cockram had argued--but she was correct to point out that the project does present some daunting methodological challenges.

According to the National Park Service's Ethnographic Resource Inventory, ethnographers should be documenting culture of “traditional” groups. A group is considered to be traditional if “their members regard the park’s resources as essential to its development and continued existence as an ethnically distinct people, the association has endured for at least two generations (40 years), and the association began prior to the establishment of the park” (Task Order J5038-02-0478). Clearly, people like Virgil Lilly fit all of these criteria. He grew up in the Shenandoah Valley and Blue Ridge Mountains, an area that helped to form his character. He lived in the area before the Parkway was begun and only later worked for the CCC building the Parkway, and eventually as a demonstration blacksmith (with his son-in-law Stan Hawley) at Mabry Mill. But what about Mary Cockram? Although a “mountain person” whose home lays adjacent to BLRI lands, she was a very young child when the Parkway was being built. Similarly, Steve and Jay Davis--brothers who I interviewed in Newland, North Carolina--moved to the area as a result of their father taking a job as a construction supervisor for the Parkway. Although they shared a number of memories about life growing up along the Parkway, their connection to it is not "traditional" in that they did not live in the area prior to the establishment of the park.

Despite these issues, the ERI framework discussed above does provide an avenue for gathering data from a wider variety of sources, and so it is worth discussing it in a bit more detail. The purpose of the ERI is to document each and every National Park Service cultural resource that is significant to a “group traditionally associated with it” (ibid.). The key issue here is that the ERI is interested in groups, not only individual people. Thus, although particular individuals like Mary Cockram and Steve Davis may not have a “traditional” connection to Parkway cultural resources because they are relatively young or new to the area, they are nonetheless part of groups that do have such associations. Specifically, Mary Cockram has an association with Floyd, a community that predated construction of the Parkway, and Steve and Jay Davis have an association with Newland (and several other old communities).

For this reason, while conducting ethnographic research in the Floyd area I talked to people about finding those who in their own lives represented in some sense the “spirit of the community.” This inductive approach not only brought me into contact with old-time mountain people like Mary Cockram, but also with representatives of what Neal Baker of the Tuggle's Gap Motel called "the alternative community," many of whom are relative new-comers to the area. But like Mary Cockram, these people are now part of Floyd, and so have become part of a community with “traditional” cultural connections to the Parkway. This approach is important to clarify because it helps fill a need for what Patty Lockamy, Chief Interpretive Officer of the BLRI called "new stories” (Informal Interview. October 26th, 2002). These are testimonies and recollections not only of people with personal ties to the lands and cultural features now administered by the BLRI, but also of those people who have put down roots in communities that the Parkway passes through.

Given this dual focus on both specific NPS cultural resources as well as relevant adjacent communities, the following prioritized list of areas affected by the Blue Ridge Parkway--based on the starting dates of BLRI planning and construction--should guide ethnographic research over the next few years as a variety of people are contacted to speak on tape:

1) Sparta/Galax
2) Laurel Springs/Glendale Springs
3) Rocky Mount
4) Floyd/Stuart
5) Spruce Pine/Bakersville/Micaville
6) Asheville
7) Linville Falls
8) Meadows of Dan
9) Waynesboro
10) Bedford/Buchanan
11) Deep Gap/Blowing Rock
12) Cherokee
13) Roanoke

See the list below for further detail. It is organized based on the General Management Plan scheme for discussing relevant communities. Group 1 are communities contiguous to parkway lands; Group 2 are gateway communities; and Group 3 are non-contiguous hamlets that may have other cultural connections to the BLRI:

Task Report #2
for the
Oral History Project Blue Ridge Parkway
(Cooperative Agreement H5000-02-0220)
Submitted by
Philip E. Coyle, Ph.D.
Principal Investigator
and
Amber Griffin
Research Assistant

This 117-page document completes Task #2 of Task Order #J5038-0200478, which was assigned as follows:

“The contractor will assay the existing collection of BLRI oral history tapes and transcripts to determine which of these are potentially useful for the purpose of the project. This determination will be done to avoid duplication, to inform additional interviews that might be done with these same people, and to serve as a source for identifying other potential interviewees.”

This report provides the required assay, completed as an annotated catalogue of the BLRI oral history collection. Additionally, this report provides an annotated list of other repositories of oral history material relevant to this project.

Narrative Overview

Oral history material of use to researchers interested in the Blue Ridge Parkway can be divided between those tapes and transcripts that are held by the Blue Ridge Parkway itself and those thousands of hours of tapes held by other libraries and archives. This report deals primarily with material held by the Blue Ridge Parkway. However, it also includes a listing of contact information for most relevant regional and national archives, as well as a more detailed discussion of the holdings of a few selected institutions.

Oral history material held by the BLRI is found both in the Curatorial Management Facility and in BLRI libraries. The Blue Ridge Parkway Curatorial Management Facility (called at times in this report simply “the archives”) is housed in a new building behind the Folk Art Center, which was completed while Jackie Holt was employed as Curator of the Blue Ridge Parkway from 1994-2003. She resigned that position in November 2003 in order to take another job at Colonial National Park. As part of this report I provide a catalogue of BLRI holdings in the facility (see Appendix A.1 and A.2).

In contrast to the Curatorial Management Facility, which is used as a climate-controlled and limited access repository of BLRI historical documents, the library’s primary purpose is to serve the research needs of Seasonal Interpretive Rangers. Thus, it contains a large collection of slides, several hundred books and about one hundred LPs, along with spiral-bound copies of oral history transcripts held in the archives. A part-time volunteer named Marian Fincher staffs the library. As part of this report I provide a catalogue of the oral history transcripts available at the Oteen Ranger District, the main library of the BLRI (see appendix B).

Narrative Description of Holdings in the Curatorial Management Facility

Currently, all archived material is catalogued by Record Group; the oral history material is all found as part of Record Group 11. There are nineteen boxes of oral history materials (#14-29, 49-50, and 78). All of the boxes containing oral history material have a catalogue number (# 19862), but I found no descriptive catalogue of the BLRI’s oral history holdings. Al Hess, Cultural Resource Officer at the BLRI Headquarters, thought that such a document does not exist. Thus, one of the purposes of this report is to provide such a catalogue (see appendix).

As might be expected, the oral history materials found in the BLRI archives vary greatly in quality. Some are priceless, others are worthless. In this report I describe this material as a series of collections, based on the person who conducted the interviews, from earliest interview to most recent. My goal is to show exactly who conducted interviews, what the interviews are about, where those tapes and transcripts can now be found, and how much researchers might be expected to learn from those interviews.

- The earliest interviews were conducted by S. Herbert Evison, a former Superintendent of the BLRI. He interviewed Stanley Abbott, Edward Abbuell, Granville Liles, Bob Hooper and other founders of the park in 1958, and then again in 1971. These are the most significant interviews in the archives. Back-up copies were made of these taped interviews in 1999.

- Earl Estes completed some interviews around the Peaks of Otter area. The quality of these tapes and interviews seem low.

- Jack Reeves, a Seasonal Historian, conducted a series of interviews with former residents of the Peaks of Otter areas in 1963. These have interesting information. The transcriptionist did not note any problems with tape quality

- Edwin Elmora conducted interviews with residents of Montebello and the Humpback Rock in 1964. These interviews contain a great deal of detailed information, but the tape recordings themselves are almost uniformly bad.

- John Palmer, Chief Naturalist of the BLRI, conducted an interview with a former resident of the Johnson Farm at Peaks of Otter in 1967.

- Larry Bancroft, a Seasonal Ranger, conducted a few interviews with residents of Linville in 1968. This work seems to be tied with that of Ed Deal and Dan Collier

- Ed Deal and Dan Collier conducted interviews with residents of Spruce Pine and Little Switzerland in 1969.
• Dan Doby conducted a single interview about Mabry Mill in 1971.

• F.A. Ketterson, BLRI Historian, conducted a series of detailed interviews about the Johnson Farm at Peaks of Otter, as well as about the Shaver House and the Cone Estate, in 1972.

• 1975 was a very good year for oral history research on the Blue Ridge Parkway. Brenda Bowers conducted an extensive series of interviews concerning Mabry Mill, Jim Gale conducted similar interviews concerning Rock Castle Gorge, and a team led by Mel Lee conducted interviews at Peaks of Otter. Meanwhile, historians at Appalachian State University conducted interviews about Doughton Park (Basin Cove) and the Cone Estate. Finally, at Humpback Rocks, Russell Small and Larry Davis conducted a few interviews.

• Former Parkway Historian Harley Jolley conducted interviews with Granville Lilles and Bob Hooper in 1978. Both are quite informative.

• Helen Keber conducted an interview in 1987

• The largest single BLRI oral history project to date (similar in scope to the 1975 interviews) is former curator Jackie Holt’s 1996 Blue Ridge Parkway Oral History Project. This project was meant to document the experiences of people who built the Parkway, particularly CCC veterans. However, the quality of these interviews is mixed. Those conducted by seasonal ranger Julie Mullis are mostly excellent, while those conducted by undergraduates Alicia Gallant and Sarah Ramirez are hampered by the fact that they stuck very closely to a set of interview questions that seem not to have been very relevant for many of the interviewees.

• Christey Carwile conducted a few interviews in 1997 with people living around Boone. They do not seem to be very informative.

• Participants in an Appalachian State University 1998 Ethnographic Field School completed a few interviews and deposited a few tapes of storytelling.

• Houck Medford’s Blue Ridge Parkway Foundation People Project is represented by one tape from 1999.

• Mary Myers, a Landscape Architect at NC State, conducted three excellent interviews with Parkway founders in 1999.

• Additionally, the collection includes other, non-oral historical, recorded material: 1) a series of tapes of public meetings; 2) instructional tapes for doing oral history research; and 3) tapes of BLRI public programs.
Finally, there are a few tapes and transcripts that are difficult to trace to any particular interviewer (or interviewee, for that matter). These miscellaneous tapes, some of them about Peaks of Otter, are grouped together at the end of the appended catalogue. See appendix A.1. for a complete description of these holdings by date and interviewer. See Appendix A.2. for a description of holdings by archived box.

Holdings of the main BLRI Library at Oteen

There are nineteen (19) Documents in this collection. All are unpublished bound and unbound transcriptions. There are no tapes located with these documents. All of these are copies of transcripts made available to seasonal interpretive rangers for their work with the public. See appendix B for a summary of these holdings.

Series 4, Folder 1 Oral History Interview of S.W. Abbott

Interviewed by S. Herbert Evison, 1958. Tape # 55

- Two very rich interview transcripts with lead designer and first Superintendent of the Parkway. Heavily used by Jolly in his book (44 pgs. 10 pg. index. 2 copies in folder)
- First interview demonstrates a paternalistic and derogatory attitude towards local people, who he sees as throwbacks to the Wild West, yet nonetheless picturesque in their simple rusticity. Still, many visionary statements.
- Second Interview discusses the soil conservation work of Russian agronomist Daniel Levandowsky, who worked with Bill Hooper to discourage native practices which “permitted and encouraged erosion and were appallingly wasteful of soil fertility” (pg. 40)

Series 4, Folder 1 Oral History Interview of S.W. Abbott

Interviewed by S. Herbert Evison, 1958. Tape # 55

- Two very rich interviews with lead designer and first Superintendent of the Parkway. Heavily used by Jolly in his book (44 pgs. 10 pg. index. 2 copies in folder)
- First interview demonstrates a paternalistic and derogatory attitude towards local people, who he sees as throwbacks to the Wild West, yet nonetheless picturesque in their simple rusticity. Still, many visionary statements
- Second Interview discusses the soil conservation work of Russian agronomist Daniel Levandowsky, who worked with Bill Hooper to discourage native practices which “permitted and encouraged erosion and were appallingly wasteful of soil fertility” (pg. 40)

Folders 2-17 are found in a single envelope

Series 4, Folder 2 McGlynn, Lawrence

7/1/1996 interview by Alicia Gallant for 1996 Blue Ridge Parkway Oral History Project

Three-ring binder of transcripts of interviews conducted by Brenda Bowers, a seasonal naturalist at Mabry Mill, in 1995. Also contains an interview by Earl Estes.

A. Mr. C.L. “Tump” Spangler, 90 years old a friend of Ed Mabry. Interview by Brenda Bowers. 7/25/75
   - Talks about Mr. “Mayberry” (the proper spelling) making wagon wheels, construction and operation of the mill, downstream Agee Mill, blacksmithing, sawed timber, unusualness of Ed Mabry in being such a jack-of-all-trades, “stout” Mrs. Mabry, physical description of Ed Mabry, cornshuckings and log-rollings (in which deadened trees were burned, that Mabry didn’t farm, that he didn’t like the BLRI because it “intruded on his operation,”

B. Frank Dalton, age 72, helped Mrs. Mabry grind grain after her husband became ill. Interview by B. Bowers 8/13/75
   - Detailed information about Mabry family and operation of the mill. Includes description of grinding meal, blacksmithing, sawmilling, lack of mill pond below, Mabry’s MS, his eating habits, his love of education (though he didn’t go to school), membership in Concord Baptist church, his neighborliness, dislike for the BLRI because “he didn’t bother nobody.”

C. Mr. and Mrs. Foster Dalton, lived with Mrs. Mabry for about 8 months. They did not want to have this information taped, therefore the interviewer, Ms. Bowers, is giving some of the information on Tape. 8/16/75
   - Some good detailed information about the Mabry’s way-of-life

D. Mrs. Sena Cassell, niece of Mrs. Mabry. By B. bowers 7/25/75
   - Mrs. Mabry’s housekeeping, happiness that the mill was preserved, how Agee’s milled most of the flour while the Mabry’s milled meal.

E. Bess Ayers, 80 years old and lives in a house near the overflow parking lot at the mill. Knew the Mabry’s. By B. Bowers, 8/14/75
   - Mrs. Mabry’s fine garden, how they had bedbugs, furnishings, eating habits, so many cats they had a cat cemetery,

F. Newton Hylton, age 85 knew Ed Mabry and worked with him. By Earl Estes. 4/8/1957
   - Details of milling, sawmilling, milling of “chop” for cattle feed, blacksmithing, lack of children.
• Mabry an excellent miller who worked closely with his wife, who he called “Boss,” good wagonmaker, blacksmith, Mrs. Mabry’s physical description, housekeeping, Mabry being a “rawboned man and about as stout as anyone in this country,” pronounced their name “Mabry,” not “Mayberry.”

H. Mr. and Mrs. Homer Harris, both knew the Mabrys, both are in their sixties. Interview by B. Bowers, 8/25/75.
• Mill-operated jigsaw, cat stories, grinding meal, etc.

Appendix C: Notes on the Oral History Collections at Appalachian State University, compiled by Amber Griffin

W.L. Eury Appalachian Collection, which is located in Belk Library at Appalachian State University—Boone, N.C. 28608

There are several publications of oral history projects in the library database, which were housed either in the special collection or the archives. A separate database for the special collection itself does not exist and it is rather difficult to compile a list of all the oral histories that exist in this collection. Some of the more notable collections such as the Alice Lloyd College project are located in the special collections closed archives and cannot be viewed without an appointment.

Publications: This category is a list and abstract of published oral history material housed in the main stacks of the W.L Eury collection.

Appalachia: Way of Seeing, Way of Knowing/ Marla Browne (et. al.) 2000
Published oral histories done by students Subjects include poetry, old times, weaving, family etc. in the Appalachia mountains.

Snowbird gravy & dishpan pie: mountain people recall/ Patsy Moore Ginns 1982
Published collection of oral history in a story form from twenty different retired mountain people in western North Carolina. Subjects include: home and family life, child life, of work, of religion, medicine plants and herbs, animals, community, mountain stories, ghosts haunts and witches.

The people of the New River oral histories from the Ash, Alleghany, and Watauga counties of North Carolina/ Leland R Cooper and Mary Lee Cooper 2001. Published collection of oral histories includes 30 interviews of people over seventy years old and covering most of the twentieth century. Subjects include every thing from apples to zoning.

Southern Appalachia, 1885-1915: oral histories from the state corner area of North Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia/ Roy Edwin Thomas 1991. Published oral history transcriptions (mountain dialect included) from this area from the 1970’s, interviewees were older people born in the late 1800’s. Subjects include migration, Civil War, hunting, food, transportation, timber, folk culture, government, folk medicine, etc.

Mountain Voices: a legacy of the Blue Ridge and Great Smokies/ Warren Moore 1988. Published collection of oral histories from western North Carolina. Subjects include: terrain and elements, people and their history, mountain living, Cherokee people, culture and society, progress and problems, etc.
Special Collections Archives: This category is a list of oral history collections in the closed W. L. Eury Collection Archives. To access this material an appointment must be made ahead of time.

Alice Lloyd College Oral History Collection/ Appalachian State University, Emory and Henry College, Lees Junior College 1977. The Appalachian Oral History Project (AOHP) was conducted in Watauga County, North Carolina between 1973 and 1980 in conjunction with the Alice Lloyd College Appalachian Oral History Project. Over 500 interviews are included as well as information about round tables and cultural events. The records include handwritten and typed transcriptions (edited and unedited) of the interviews, audiocassettes, and administrative files. Most interviews consist of general information about the interviewee's youth, family life, farming and marriage. Also included is information about the Appalachian Quilt Exhibit which had ties to the Oral History Project.

Appalachian Crafts and Music Festival tapes 1984-1987 The Appalachian Crafts and Music Festival was an annual event held at Appalachian State University in the 1980s. The Festival featured local and regional craftsman and musicians. Appalachian graduate student Mary Greene organized these festivals. Featured musicians include Ora Watson, Frank Proffitt, Jr., Glen Bolick, Stanley Hicks, Blue Ridge Ramblers, old time string band Walnut Hill, bluegrass band Timberline, and the Watauga County High School Mountain Music Club. Featured crafts include leatherwork, chairs, woodcarvings, quilts and cornshuck dolls. Materials include papers, 35 audiocassettes and 6 videocassettes, recorded at the Festivals in 1984, 1985 and 1987.

Appalachian Land Ownership Survey collection of papers 1976-1983 The collection contains computer punch cards, computer printouts, land plats, newspaper articles, notes, research documents, working papers, correspondence, maps, posters, a reel-to-reel cassette and audio cassettes. Materials illustrate Appalachian-related issues such as agriculture, coal mining, housing, land ownership, land usage, and tourism. The Survey was organized by the Highlander Research and Education Center and conducted by the Appalachian Land Ownership Task Force. Appalachian State University was a primary sponsoring institution. Instrumental individuals were Patricia Beaver, John Gaventa, and Bill Horton.

Cone family collection 1850-1969 Brothers Moses and Ceasar Cone were the eldest children within the Herman and Helen Guggenheimer Cone family. Although born in Jonesborough, Tennessee, they were raised in Baltimore, Maryland with their eleven younger siblings. Herman Sr., Moses, Ceasar, and younger brother Monroe incorporated into H. Cone & Sons. A later business venture was named Cone Export and Commission Company, a North Carolina textile company. Moses and his wife, Bertha, were the owners of the Flat Top Manor, currently known as the Moses Cone Estate near Blowing Rock, N.C. Material includes the book entitled Half Century Book, 1891-1941, 25 family photographs, a program from the dedication of Appalachian State University's Moses H. and Bertha Cone Hall, a leather wallet engraved "Moses H. Cone," a newspaper clipping scrapbook inscribed "Cesar Cone," and other newspaper clippings.

Cratis Dearl Williams papers 1786-1986 bulk 1943-1983 Cratis Dearl Williams is considered the father of Appalachian Studies. The collection includes academic research, genealogical research, correspondence, university documents, photographs, audio-cassettes, phonographic field recordings, commercial recordings, one video recording, slides and family memorabilia. The bulk of the collection consists of materials that are related to Cratis Williams' employment and scholarship at Appalachian State University. Williams's employment at Appalachian State University included such titles as English teacher, Dean of the Graduate School, Acting Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs, and Acting Chancellor. Williams' scholarship focused on ballads, Appalachian literature and Appalachian speech. His master's thesis, "Ballads and Songs," focuses on eastern Kentucky ballads. His dissertation is the authorative examination of Appalachian literature, entitled, "The Southern Mountaineer in Fact and Fiction." The family of Cratis Williams deeded the main body of Williams' professional papers to the W.L. Eury Appalachian Collection in 1986. Books, journals, photographs, prints, and three-dimensional objects were donated by Williams' son, David C. Williams, in 1998. John Idol donated a ninety minute audio tape of Cratis Williams' speech entitled "Old and New Worlds of Words," December 16, 1999.

Crossnore School papers 1926-1997 The Crossnore School was opened by Dr. Mary Martin Sloop and included a school and a weaving room furnishing mountain women a means to earn their own money. Materials include photocopied publicity materials, an incomplete run of Crossnore News, undated price lists, articles printed about Crossnore, a grant application, and one piece of correspondence Jack Guy papers ca. 1960-1973 Jack Guy was born to Thomas Guy in the Beech Creek community of Avery County, N.C. circa 1931. His company, Guy's Folk Toys Home Industries, made and marketed folk toys. Mr. Guy was a member of the Beech Mountain Ramblers and recorded many northwestern North Carolina musicians. Materials include audio reels and cassettes, photographs, and three dimensionnal objects (includes toys). The 35 reel-to-reels and 20 corresponding audio-cassettes contain interviews and music of various Watauga County residents, including Gaither Carlton, Mack Presnell, Tab Ward, Arnold Watson, and Willard Watson. The 25 black and white photographs feature Guy's folk toys.

James Farmer Collette recordings [sound recording] 1937 James Farmer Collette (1904-1939) of Jacks Creek in Leslie County, Kentucky was recorded in The James York Family Folksong Collection James York (1907- ca. 1980s) and his wife Lessie York were singers of traditional songs which they learned from family members in Iredell and Davie Counties. Mr. York, a public school teacher and principal, and Mrs. York, a beautician, were recorded by W. Amos "Doc" Abrams while James was a student at Appalachian State Teacher's College in the early 1940s. Lessie York played the guitar while James York sang. In the 1940s, they participated in two of the annual meetings of the North Carolina Folklore Society. Mr. York served as President of the N.C. Folklore Society twice, in 1954 and in another unknown year. The North Carolina Federation of Music Clubs awarded the Yorks a special citation in 1973. In 1977, the North Carolina Folklore Society awarded them with the Brown-Hudson Award. Contains both handwritten and typed folksong lyrics.

John C. Bernhardt papers 1846-1921 The John C. Bernhardt Papers are a photocopy of a typewritten transcription of the diary of Major G.W.F. Harper of Caldwell County, North Carolina, and of the North Carolina Volunteers. Although Harper kept diaries from 1841 to 1921, the majority is from 1881 to 1921. Some parts and one separate section were written by his wife Ella Rankin and his sister-in-law Emma Rankin.

Lucy Long papers 1980-1981 Materials include photocopies of Lucy Long's field notes, releases, and tape information. Items were created for a project entitled "The Appalachian oral history." Long studied the Hicks family of Beech Mountain and the use of the dulcimer. Period covered is approximately 1870 to the present. Included is a photocopy of a National Endowments for the Humanities grant application for Long's proposed project, "The Traditions of plucked dulcimer making and building in a North Carolina family" and her interim report. Audio cassettes and slides are not included.

Lynne Getz student papers 1997-2001 Consists of 23 oral histories conducted by Getz's public history students. Most interviews include release forms from the interviewees. Interviewees were residents of counties surrounding Watauga County, N.C.
Moses Cone Estate Collection 1905-1945
Materials include correspondence concerning the operation of Flat Top Manor (i.e. raising of Shropshire sheep), bills, ledgers, photographs, Christmas cards, pamphlets, and a Gospel of Luke.

Richard Chase papers 1928-1988  Richard Chase was a folklorist who collected folktales in Watauga County, N.C. and western Virginia. He wrote several books including The Jack Tales, American Folk Tales and Songs, and The Grandfather Tales. Materials include correspondence, reviews, flyers, essays, poems, and audio cassettes.

W. Amos Abrams papers 1884-1979
The Abrams Papers contain four significant sections: Abrams' audio recordings, his correspondence, his folk song collection and his speech collection. The audio recordings were recorded primarily while he lived in Watauga County. Formats include sound disc, reel-to-reel, and audio cassette. They include Abrams' commentary and consist of mountain ballad singers and radio presentations of World War II era political leaders. Also included are Abrams' educational materials from Duke University and his Wilcox-Gay recorder.

Zeb Shook papers 1914-1996  Materials include Shook's research materials and personal correspondence. He researched western North Carolina education, especially Boone Fork Institute and the Stanley McCormick School. Shook also studied Wild Bill Hickok and his connection to Watauga County, N.C. via David C. McCanles and Sarah Shull. Also included are school newspapers and audiocassettes recording the memories of Dr. Charles G. McKaraher and of Harvey Trivette.

Other oral histories in the W.L. Eury Collection  I found 40+ oral history transcriptions in a filing cabinet drawer but could not fine them in any catalogue system. They were all from 1973-75 and were listed as belonging to the Appalachian State Oral History Project or to the Black History Oral History Project, tape numbers are listed at the beginning of each transcription. From looking at these transcriptions my guess is that the interviews were done by students, some are more substantial than others. Listed below are some samples.

Ott Blair a sled maker in North Carolina/1973  In this interview he speaks about how he became a sled maker by accident, logging, milling, farming, hogs and bears, and moonshine.

Mr. and Mrs. Ben Byrd/ 1974  In this interview the couple talks about life in Valley Crucis, workin for a living, bare feet in the winter time and late night summer dances.
Mr. and Mrs. E.E. Carlton/ 1973  In this interview the couple talks about why they moved to Boone, weaving, family life, and Mr. Carlton’s job as a Sheriff.

Howard Clark/1973 In this interview he talks about Indian relics he has found in the Boone area and about living through the Great Depression.

Blanch Combs/ 1973  In this interview she talks about being an “old maid teacher”, her family, and what it was like being a teacher in the old days.

Addie Clawson/ 1973  In this interview he speaks about race relations in the mountains, being black in the south, and how things have changed.

Task Report #3
for the
Blue Ridge Parkway Oral History Project
(Cooperative Agreement H5000-02-0220)
Submitted by
Philip E. Coyle, Ph.D.
Principal Investigator
and
Amber Griffin and Tonya Teague
Research Assistants

This 29-page document completes Task #3 of Task Order #J5038-0200478, which was assigned as follows:

“A preliminary assessment of park archives and active correspondence will be completed in order to identify potential individuals and groups to contact as potential interviewees. The researcher will work closely with the park curator to determine records most likely to contain useful information. Possible documents from park archives and division files:

- Maintenance and construction files
- Lands Use Files
- Historic Resource Studies and Administrative History
- Oral History tapes and transcripts
- Agricultural Use Files
- Landscape Architects Files
- Natural History Specialists Files

This task should be completed within six months of beginning the project.”

This report provides the required preliminary assessment. The Narrative Overview discusses the records consulted and the subsequent list provides names and contact information for individuals and groups.

Narrative Overview

In constructing a list of potential contacts, I was guided by the Scope of Work provided for this project, but also sought to maximize access to knowledgeable consultants by working most closely with those who have a history of involvement with communities along the Blue Ridge Parkway. Unfortunately, because the park curator had recently resigned to take another position at Colonial National Park, I was not able to work as closely with her as I would have liked (although I did complete a taped one-hour interview with her prior to her departure).

Of the people that I was able to work with, Laura Rotegard (former Community Development Officer) was particularly helpful. Additionally, Historical Resource Studies, particularly those prepared by Jean Haskell Spear, were also quite useful.
Finally, files of recent correspondence located in the Curatorial Management Facility were also somewhat useful.

This list of approximately two-hundred people serves as a useful starting point for contacting and selecting potential interviewees.

Task Report #4
for the
Oral History Project Blue Ridge Parkway
(Cooperative Agreement H5000-02-0220)
Submitted by
Philip E. Coyle, Ph.D.
Principal Investigator

This 6-page document completes Task #4 of Task Order #J5038-0200478, which was assigned as follows:

“Task #4: Park staff who have personal or work ties to the BLRI and surrounding communities will be contacted in order to identify potential interviewees. This task should be completed within seven months of commencement of project.”

This report provides a discussion of contacts made with Blue Ridge Parkway personnel (the Narrative Overview) along with contact list of relevant Blue Ridge Parkway personnel, for future reference.

Narrative Overview

Employees of the Blue Ridge Parkway are an excellent source of information about the Parkway itself, and about potential oral history and ethnography consultants. A number of employees have spent their entire careers working for the Blue Ridge Parkway. Others are drawn from local communities and so have deep roots in the areas in which they work. Even employees with more limited experience in the park often seem to have a wealth of contact information.

Over the past several months I have spent time with a number of these employees, and these contacts have been the primary source of information for developing a larger contact list (discussed in Task Report #3). Specifically, I have made three types of contacts with BLRI employees: 1) in-depth interviews; 2) informal discussions; and 3) brief contacts. I discuss each below.

1. In-depth Interviews

Since beginning this project I have conducted in-depth interviews with five BLRI employees.

- In November 2002 I spent several days with Laura Rotegard--currently Management Assistant to Superintendent Dan Brown, but formerly a community development officer for the BLRI—going through her extensive files. In many ways, Ms. Rotegard served as an “applied ethnographer” herself and the contacts and information derived from those interviews are very rich.
- In November 2002 I also interviewed Jackie Holt, former curator of the BLRI (now at Colonial National Park). This taped, hour-long interview helped me to understand the institutional history of the current cooperative agreement. She also discussed the CCC project that she began in 1996.

- In January 2003 I interviewed Patty Lockamy, Chief of Interpretation for the BLRI. This taped, hour-long interview clearly discussed the direction and themes that Lockamy sees as important for the BLRI in the coming years.
- Over the past months I have had a number of in-depth discussions with Al Hess, Cultural Resource Officer for the BLRI. Mr. Hess is my primary contact in the BLRI headquarters.
- In May 2003 I taped an hour-long interview with Phil Noblitt, another Management Assistant to Dan Brown. He is knowledgeable about many areas in the Blowing Rock area and is influential in thinking about interpretation of the BLRI.

2. Informal Discussions

I have had four informal discussions with BLRI and NPS employees.

- Carl Stearns, Seasonal Interpretive Ranger in the Balsam Ranger District. We discussed his work as the Parks-As-Classrooms coordinator for Jackson and Swain counties, particularly his work with an 8th-grade class in Cherokee.
- Michele Maertens, District Interpretive Ranger in the Oteen Ranger Station. We discussed the Parks-As-Classroom project and access to the library.
- Bob Hoyle, seasonal Interpretive Ranger in the Oteen Ranger Station. He is developing curriculum for inclusion in the Parks-As-Classrooms project.
- Mark Schoepfle, ERI coordinator for the NPS. We discussed the relationship between the Ethnographic Resources Inventory and the NPS Applied Ethnography program more generally.

3. Brief contacts

I've crossed paths with a variety of BLRI personnel. These contacts have been aimed at building rapport with the possibility of developing more focused discussions in the future. Additionally, I sent out an e-mail to a list of BLRI personnel with the hopes of generating more contact information.

The following contact list will serve as a point of departure for future consultations and interviews with BLRI employees and retirees.

This 10-page report completes Task #5 of Cooperative Agreement H5000-02-0220, which was assigned as follows:

“A preliminary list of interviewees by area will be compiled with basic information such as age, gender, address, position in the community, area of special knowledge, and any other information that might be useful to future researchers should the person not be interviewed in this project. This task should be completed within eight months of the beginning of the project.”

This report provides a discussion of contacts made with community members and Blue Ridge Parkway personnel (the Narrative Overview) along with a list that contains basic information about these people that will be useful for arranging potential future interviews.

Narrative Overview

This is a working document that I have been using to organize my interview schedule as I have developed new contacts and followed up on contacts already presented in Task Reports #3 and #4. For this reason, some of the people listed below have already been interviewed (interview dates provided below are approximate), while others have interviews scheduled in the near future. But others have only been contacted in a preliminary way, with no solid interview completed or scheduled. Thus, this group comprises a “short-list” of people to be contacted in the near future for interviews; it does not comprise an exhaustive list of all potential interviewees for this project.

Louise Hepler
By Rebekah Strickland
Published in Parkway Milepost
Fall-Winter 2004-05

Louise Hepler lives in a house overlooking the Blue Ridge Parkway near Philip’s Gap. She holds several agricultural leases along the Parkway, and is closely involved with the Blue Ridge Baptist Church, located at milepost number 265. Mrs. Hepler was born and raised in the area where she lives today and has a wealth of knowledge about the region. Her stories and reminiscences are a valuable part of the Blue Ridge Parkway tradition.

Mrs. Hepler has fond memories of visiting the farm belonging to her grandfather, Joe Calloway, at Calloway Gap. The Calloway farm was prosperous, with several barns and outbuildings. Mrs. Hepler recalls her grandfather storing “stock beets,” hams, and many varieties of beans and grain. She and her immediate family lived part of the year with her Calloway grandparents at Calloway Gap and part in Wilkesboro, where she attended school. In the early summer, after her school let out for the year, she and her family would climb the mountain to stay with her grandparents and help them plant crops and tend livestock.

Mrs. Hepler was sixteen years old in the mid-1930s when the Blue Ridge Parkway came through. She remembers seeing the Parkway being built. “It opened up the country a lot,” she says, now “we could go several miles each direction, because we could get through.” She and her friends would the road bed “to see how they were getting along with the road.”

The CCC camps that came with the road-building provided a window into different ways of life for the people in the region. The boys in the camps came from all over the country, and few of them returned to farming after their experience in the CCC. “They had all the farming they wanted before they went to the camps,” Hepler says. Despite the interest of local girls in these hard-working young men, none married CCC or Parkway workers, but instead moved to the cities to do defense work when World War II started.

Growing up during summers in the mountains, Mrs. Hepler heard stories about the places through which the Blue Ridge Parkway now passes. Many of the stories explain the meaning behind prominent landmarks along the Parkway. Pig Pen Gap, at milepost 270 got its name when “one winter, it come a blizzard, and some of the people . . . had hogs to get in there. And it snowed and they got up in a deep place and smothered to death in the snow.” An overlook near milepost 265, looks over Betsy’s Rock Falls. “The story behind that is that this Betsy Pierce . . . and her husband didn’t get along and she came . . . and lived under that Rock.” “I believe she had four girls in here, and the story says that . . . one of the little girls . . . died. And when they went to get the body and bury it, they found out she was living up in there, so she moved out . . . It was probably about the time the church [Blue Ridge Baptist] was organized.”
Blue Ridge Baptist Church was founded in 1887 and features prominently in Mrs. Hepler’s life. She attended the church growing up and was on the centennial anniversary committee of the church. Mrs. Hepler tells the story of her great-grandfather getting “thrown out of the church because he had built a house and put windows in the house.” Apparently he was too ostentatious for the rest of the congregation.

The Blue Ridge Baptist Church and the land it stands on belong to the Blue Ridge Parkway, but will remain in the possession of the congregation “as long as it’s used for religious services.” Recently, members of the church put an outdoor table and picnic shelter on the property for church functions and family reunions, and the building project has caused some contention between the congregation and the Parkway. The church wants to expand its crowded cemetery by trading lands with the Parkway, which has been reluctant because of the unauthorized building. The congregation also wants to expand the church itself, and finds those attempts similarly blocked. The new building has made it difficult to negotiate the land swap that members of the church have been seeking “off and on now for . . . twenty-five or thirty years.” Mrs. Hepler says the problem could be easily resolved “if you knew who to see and how to go about it, but . . . I couldn’t do it, because I don’t know who to see either!”

Despite this conflict, Mrs. Hepler continues to manage five agricultural leases along the Parkway, though she makes no money from doing it. The purpose of such leases is to maintain the pastoral feel of the Parkway, and she does this by keeping cattle on them from “the first of May until the first of November.” Mrs. Hepler inherited her leases from her father, and looks forward to passing them on to her sons. She takes pride in keeping the land attractive for local people to admire, as well as for the sight-seers and tourists who drive the Parkway. She loves nature and wildlife and would like to work even more closely with the Parkway to “do more on our leases to encourage the deer and turkeys.”

Don Richardson

By Philip Coyle

Before his retirement, Pastor Don Richardson was a long-time leader of the Saddle Mountain Union Baptist Church, which is located between the Sparta and Galax turn-offs of the Blue Ridge Parkway in Alleghany County, North Carolina. For many years, members of the church have conducted creek baptisms in a pool of water that is on Blue Ridge Parkway land. They have had permission from a series of park superintendents to conduct these baptisms, but in recent years Parkway personnel have expressed some concern about this practice on environmental grounds. There was even a threat that the baptisms might no longer be allowed.

In order to understand Pastor Richardson’s perspective on the issue, and to learn more about this remarkable man, I spent a few hours at his house last summer. Pastor Richardson’s small house was decorated with family and church pictures and memorabilia. His wife worked quietly in the next room as we spoke, occasionally making a comment out of microphone distance. At the end of the interview Pastor Richardson embraced me and invited me to his church. “Brother,” he said, “you are welcome to join us anytime.” I was moved by his heartfelt commitment to God, which has surely touched many others during his long career.
Pastor Richardson has a unique gift: he is able to spell rapidly most any word put to him—backwards. “Our house leaked,” Pastor Richardson said, remembering his boyhood days, “the wind would blow the roofing off. My brother made a ladder, and he’d get up on that house and patch that roofing. But before he could do that, my mother would take an old newspaper and put it on the table, and take paste and put it up there overhead. I’d lie in the bed and read those words forwards and read them backwards. And, that way, I learned to spell backwards. Comes very simple. E-L-P-M-I-S.” On April 15, 1986 Pastor Richardson was invited onto the Johnny Carson show to demonstrate his talent. “We had a real good time,” Pastor Richardson recalled, “Johnny was great.”

For nearly eleven years after World War II, Pastor Richardson had a gospel radio program every Sunday at 4:00 pm on WPOB in Galax, Virginia (“1360 on your dial”). “That was real good,” he said. “I was on it for ten years and eleven months, and I felt impressed to get this program. I went to the radio station, and the radio announcer gave me good encouragement. He said, ‘We just had a preacher to leave here, and he left us in debt.’ I said, ‘I’m not going to lead you on. I’m going to pay every Sunday. If it takes my money, I’ll pay it.’ And I kept this money separate. I was out three dollars and seventy-five cents, the best I remember, on my first program. The rest was given to me, ten-fifty a program at that time. The next Sunday, it was three or four dollars. From then on out, I carried the radio money in a different pocket. I never did have to spend no more of my money. But I’d go in person. Some puts it on tape, but I didn’t. And this drive from out here on the Parkway to Galax…ten years and eleven months. It got old. I was trying to make eleven years, but after ten years and eleven months I said, ‘I’m coming home.”’

In 1955 Richardson also became pastor of the Saddle Mountain Union Baptist Church, where he remained until his retirement more than four decades later. During that time he married about four hundred and fifty couples. He officiated at exactly nine-hundred and sixty-seven funerals. I asked him how he went about baptizing someone at his church. This was his response: “Well, say, you come to me and say, ‘I’m a believer in the Lord, Jesus Christ, and I want to be baptized.’ Now, a lot of people won’t baptize you unless you join their church, but I’m not that way. But if you come to me and say, ‘I’m a believer in the Lord, Jesus Christ. I’d like to be baptized,’ then we’ll set a time and we’ll go down there…and we’ll announce it. All right…what we do when we go in there, we’ll have a song, have a prayer. And then I’ll raise my right hand, and I’ll say…when we get him in the water, me on this side, and the other guy on the other side… ‘I baptize this, our brother, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.’ Put him under, bring him out, and say ‘Amen.’ It’s what we do. It’s what we do.”

Pastor Don Richardson, now looking toward his 84th birthday, has witnessed the entire history of the Blue Ridge Parkway as he has carried out the duties of his faith. He felt that anything was possible through conversation, and that any dispute between the Blue Ridge Parkway and his church was superficial and transitory. He mentioned that while some church-members may have been angry with the Blue Ridge Parkway for attempting to impose limits on their worship, the history of good feelings and positive relations between the church and the Blue Ridge Parkway would certainly win-out in the end.

Today, he feels Parkway administrators and employees are doing a good job. “It’s held its own,” he said, “except for a lot of building off the Parkway, off on the easement. But they’ve done a super job keeping the Parkway up, keeping it mowed; it looks good. It’s going to need a new top one of these days; it’s breaking down the middle of the highway. But it’s a great road, and we appreciate it, and they’ve done a super job taking care of it. Yes, Siree. A great road. Amen. N-E-M-A.”

Wayne Henderson
By Tonya Teague

Appalachia is home to some of the world’s most remarkably talented musicians and instrument makers. Wayne Henderson helps to uphold this reputation. Henderson has lived his entire life in Rugby, Virginia, a small town nestled in southern Grayson County, near the junction of the Virginia, North Carolina, and Tennessee state lines. Henderson came to instrument-making early in his life, under such strong influences as legendary old-time fiddler and fiddle-maker Albert Hash: “I started playing guitar when I was five years old,” he says. “In the community and the area I grew up in, not too many people around there had lots of money or anything, so we were always trying to make the things we needed or wanted. So I got into making instruments because I liked to play music.”

Following the advice of Albert Hash, Henderson completed his first guitar in his teenage years. He reminisces, “…I learned how to make an instrument that would hold up and stay together. And I stamped a number one in it…that was in the sixties. And I still have that guitar. You know, with a serial number “one” in it, and it’s still together. It’s pretty much just like it was then.” Growing up, Henderson became close friends with Hash, who lived nearby in White Top, Virginia. He remembers Hash fondly as a close friend and musical companion. “Albert was one of my main mentors, and a good friend, and somebody I played music with a lot, and somebody I had the utmost respect for…Albert was a real important person in my life.”

These days, Henderson is busy. He enjoys visiting and picking with friends (some, rather well-known), such as Doc Watson, in his free time: “…If he’s not real busy on the road playing…Doc loves to play. I mean, he might just come over to the shop and sit and jam. And something like that’s really a thrill, to get to play with somebody who’s one of your heroes, for sure. And he’s just always been friendly and nice.” Henderson also plays at music festivals, including the Wayne C. Henderson Music Festival and Guitar Competition. The festival was started (with the assistance of Watson) in 1995 at the Grayson Highland State Park in order to express appreciation for this “living legend”: “We started planning on it, and got a local organization—the folk society of the county—to help put on that first one…and I asked Doc if he would do it, and that’s when he said, ‘Yeah, I’ll help you get it started,’ and that was a big help.” The festival donates a portion of its proceeds to the “Support-a-Scholarship” fund to help local young musicians continue their education. “I feel like that’s a good thing to do with the money. I can remember how I would have liked to have had an opportunity like that when I was a kid to have gone off and study with a great player or something, you know? To learn more how to play.”

Henderson is widely known for his unique “drop-thumb” guitar playing style, which he has also demonstrated in Carnegie Hall, in three national tours of “Masters of the Steel-String Guitar,” and in seven Asian nations. Henderson also spends a great deal of time in his shop in Rugby, making instruments for “the famous and the not-so-famous,” recently including internationally distinguished guitarist Eric Clapton. Henderson works to preserve old guitar-making styles: “I’ve changed a few things, but I love those old guitars—the sound of them and everything—so much I wouldn’t want to change them if I could. You know, they just sound so good, and I’m perfectly satisfied to try to duplicate old-world workmanship that was in those old ones, and that’s a pretty rare thing in itself. Not too many people do that.” Henderson’s guitars are best known for their volume, tone, and resonance; he also stresses the importance of a long-lasting instrument, one that “…hopefully stays put for a hundred years or so.”

While he is widely renowned for his accomplishments, and could successfully live and work in Nashville, Henderson maintains a humble attitude towards his success and maintains close ties with his Grayson County home. “I’ve never wanted to be anywhere else except Rugby, right there where I live…you know? I get plenty of attention right where I live in Rugby there, enough to do me anyway, and I just like living there and knowing my family, friends, and neighbors, and the landscape is gorgeous… And as far as I know, I won’t ever be anywhere else.”

Moreover, Henderson is known as “a friend to everyone” who willingly shares his time and talent without hesitation, following in the footsteps of his mentor, Albert Hash. Henderson believes this selfless attitude to be common to the area: “I think that most of us around here know that our music is sort of a resource, and trying to be stingy with it or keep it from people or anything is not going to help anything. And most of us, I think, just really like to do it. I love to play anything I can for anybody if I think they’d like to hear it, you know? I’m certainly like that. I like to play for anybody that wants to hear it.”

Audrey Hash-Ham and Archie Powers

By Paul Graham

Guided by spirits, friends, neighbors, trust, a direct connection to the past and the desire to continue the traditions of her father, Audrey Hash-Ham turns out works of art in her fiddle shop.

Hash-Ham grew up in Lansing, North Carolina, where she watched her father, Albert Hash, the most revered mountain fiddle-maker of all time, craft his world-renowned musical instrument. Much like her father, Hash-Ham now earns respect as one of the best luthiers of her time.

Hash-Ham began making fiddles with her father in 1967: “I graduated from high school in 1967. They didn’t teach shop to little girls, then. It was, you know…‘Home Ec.’ Anyway, I had followed dad around for so long and I finally asked, ‘Dad, I want to build something.’” She made a dulcimer and, according to Hash-Ham, it was “the most horrendous looking thing you ever seen in your life.” Hash-Ham’s breakthrough was the first fiddle she ever made. That fiddle was presented to her father as a birthday gift. “Rather I would have had that then a brand-new Cadillac,” Hash told his daughter.

When Albert Hash died in 1983, Hash-Ham took up the business with long-time Albert Hash disciple and partner Archie Powers. Powers and Hash-Ham have a mutual understanding. Both believe that Albert Hash guides them everyday in both business and personal ventures. Powers describes the time Audrey was making a scroll on a fiddle neck: “She couldn’t figure out how to finish a portion of the work. She asked, ‘how am I going to get that rounded out in there,’ then ‘how would Albert do it?’ Out of the blue it came to her: ‘roll your knife.’”

Hash-Ham’s unique style combines influences from her father, Powers, and her own imagination. All Hash-Ham fiddles come with a special style of head and an inlaid carving in the back of the fiddle. One of those carvings resulted from a moment of inspiration received by Archie Powers: “I was picking beans and a thought came in my mind, ‘why not put hummingbird on the fiddle.’ So I called up Audrey and said, ‘I am going to make another back for that fiddle, and I’m going to put a hummingbird in there,’ and I didn’t know it was Albert’s favorite bird ‘till we did it. That was his favorite. We have a lot of thoughts like that come to us and they are never wrong.” Hash-Ham and Powers trust each other’s judgment and skill. They have been working together since the death of Albert Hash and are in tune with the other’s thoughts and ideas on fiddle-making. “He calls me at 6:30 in the morning, ‘Hey, I got an idea.’ We work it out before we ever get started.”

Hash-Ham has taught several people the fundamentals of fiddle-making; she even once had a 76-year-old student. Hash-Ham’s current apprentice is Power’s son, Carl. While she has trained many young students in the art of fiddle making, she considers Carl Powers, who never received formal training in woodworking, to be perhaps her most gifted and promising student. Hash-Ham sees in Carl someone who will strive to pass the tradition of instrument making to the younger generation.

Audrey Hash-Ham and Archie Powers were recently presented with a 2002-2003 Virginia Folklife Apprenticeship Program grant. This grant will allow Hash-Ham and Powers to continue their work by teaching promising young luthiers their skills. Travelers along the Blue Ridge Parkway are invited to visit the Hash-Ham and Powers workshop at 1976 Bear Wallow Road off Highway 58 in Lansing, North Carolina.

E.S. Lundy
By Nathan Somers

Folk artist E.S. Lundy was born in 1912 and grew up on Grayson Street in Galax, Virginia. His family has ties to this section of the Blue Ridge since at least the Civil War. His great-great grandfather was a Civil-War veteran who later served as a Baptist preacher in the Galax area. His grandfather was the second person to own a car in Galax. During the 1920's He would give townsfolk rides: "Grandad would take them around for ten cents a hit," Lundy Says. Mr. Lundy has seen the decline of the timber industry as well as the passing of the American chestnut trees. As a child Mr. Lundy used paper bags for writing paper because his family was too poor to buy tablets. Later his family did better. This allowed E.S. to take painting lessons from a local school teacher. "Well, for a dollar a lesson once a week, that wasn't too bad. Dad scraped up the money for me to take them. And I took 'til I finished high school." E.S. developed a strong relationship with his teacher who would often call on him to critique her own work. He loves painting and has filled his home with his own works.

He also remembers his family walking miles to hear a neighbor’s radio on Saturday nights: "I had a cousin that lived out in west Galax and he had one of the first radios. He used a car battery to power it, you know, and we would go out there to hear the old barn dance from Nashville on Saturday nights." He witnessed the by-gone attractions of the old-time county fair (as well as the first of the now famous Galax Fiddler's Conventions): "I would go down to the Blacks Grocery where I could set on the platform and see them, you know, and they would have elephants and them old elephants would push them trucks and wagons up the hill with their heads. It was quite a sight for a kid." Lundy also had ties to the legendary country music pioneer Ernest Stoneman: "Ernest and his family lived right over the hill here" Lundy remembers. Mr. Lundy was married in 1933. At the time of the wedding Lundy recalls ironically that "when I got married I was one of the wealthiest boys around here. I guess I had seven dollars--four after I paid the preacher.” He was in London during the German bombing raids of World War II. He then came back to the Blue Ridge mountains where he began to paint again, working now as a sign painter. Today E.S. Lundy's paintings of birds, flowers, landscapes, and religious themes can be found hanging at the new library in Galax, or for sale at various shops around town. He may also be contracted directly about his paintings by telephone at (276) 236-3734

Erika Johnson and Kris Hodges
By Kip Thomas

Kris Hodges and Erika Johnson are the creators and producers of a multi-cultural festival called FloydFest, held adjacent to the Blue Ridge Parkway in Floyd, Virginia. FloydFest is called an “alternative, multicultural festival,” reflecting both their love of the “alternative community” of Floyd, Virginia, as well as their respect for the diverse cultural heritage of the Blue Ridge Parkway. Kris’ and Erika’s vision for FloydFest is also influenced by their personal histories. Erika’s parents moved from Michigan to Floyd County during the “back-to-the-land” movement of the 1960’s. Internalizing those counter-cultural values, Erika carries them on to a new generation. Kris, on the other hand, was raised in a White, upper-middle-class suburb of New York City. An introspective child, he recalls the time when his school bus picked up a Black child in a section of housing projects well outside his own neighborhood. The boy had a version of Kris’ favorite action figure, but “his was missing an arm and the clothes were all ripped and dirty and tattered. So from an early age I started thinking about people, and equality, and differences in the world.” After high-school, Kris drifted around, eventually landing in the town of Floyd, where he apprenticed himself to a local drum-maker for three years, living off the land as he learned about all types of music and people. Eventually, he hit the road again, still trying to define his understanding of the world: “I went back out of the woods and started working with bands from New York and Florida, touring with punk bands, reggae bands, whatever I could do to just to get in the scene, getting heard in the scene…learn. See the movements among people.”
As Kris recalls it, his prayers for a mate were quite literally answered when he met Erika one fateful night. With love in full bloom, they decided to move to Colorado, eventually returning to Floyd County where they lived in an unheated barn off the edge of the Parkway for several years. After saving money, they opened Oddfella’s Cantina, a Mexican-style restaurant combining good, healthy food with music. It was an immediate success, and remains a cornerstone of the downtown Floyd business district. But, Kris and Erika got bored: “slinging beans, you know?” says Kris, “Oddfella’s was kind of confining us. We thought; let’s keep growing with this thing!” Since living in the barn, they had dreams of creating an outdoor festival that integrated music and food, while reflecting the values of the Parkway and the “alternative community” that had developed around Floyd, Virginia. “That’s the context of the festival,” says Erika, “we’re trying to throw an alternative festival. A festival that’s alternative to Bonnaroo or Merlefest…We want to mix it up!”

A new inspiration struck after Kris took a trip to Africa: “They have this community and they have this sense of art, which is expressed through music and dance. And that seems to bring about this certain strength. This certain hope. This certain faith that life does hold something for the people of the world. It’s called unity. It’s called expression. It’s called rising above adversity. Rising above a motion going down and coming together that way through music.” Kris wanted to integrate this African approach to music and life into the festival: “A lot of blues and old-time music has that…kind of like the Irish music mixed with the African music, which created this bluegrass, old-time music. So I wanted to bridge the gap. It’s kind of a roots renaissance experience, and that’s what we’re trying to do. What really intrigues me is the locals that live, breath, and play music just as they did in Africa. It’s music! Because it’s not made to sell, it’s not made to buy, and it’s not made to do anything other than tell a story. To entertain your family. You know, that just seems like the real folk music.” From Erika’s perspective, Floydfest also connects with the mission of the Blue Ridge Parkway: “Floydfest is a direct expression of the spirit of the region. People drive on the Parkway hoping to experience new places. They want to experience the culture, and what the festival does, in that context, it showcases our local culture and our local musicians.” Nonetheless, Floydfest’s location next to the parkway has created several problems, specifically a lack of sufficient parking and high fees from the Blue Ridge Parkway administration. As part of their vision, Kris and Erika hope to obtain their own piece of land near the Parkway for the festival: “It could house musicians and community-members that want to work on the festival----kind of like a buy-in---you can live here and help sustain the land for the benefit of the community and the festival. And we would have world speakers there, have an annual event, and make it a true cultural center.”

Kris Hodges and Erika Johnson have worked with the community to make a number of positive changes to both the land and the people of Floyd, Virginia. Through their love of the Blue Ridge Parkway and the cultural unity and expression inherent in all humans, they have created a unique and “alternative” festival, focusing on community, diverse experiences, and a wide range of traditional and progressive music. Floydfest is held the second weekend of August. This year’s performers include Del McCoury, Donna the Buffalo, the African Showboysz Railroad Earth, and many local and regional performers. Chase Ambler’s family has lived in the mountains around Asheville for three generations. Chase Ambler’s grandfather, Chase P. Ambler, helped to form the Appalachian Mountain Association, which lobbied for the Weeks Law of 1911. That law for the first time allowed the federal government to buy private land for parks, like the Great Smoky Mountains National Park and the Blue Ridge Parkway.

A. Chase Ambler himself was born in Asheville in 1931 and had a long career as a schoolteacher. He earned a degree in pulp and paper technology, but as he puts it “I didn’t enjoy the fact of getting a degree and getting two weeks off a year. There are too many things in life to do, and you can’t cram it all in two weeks, so I thought I’d teach.” Chase Ambler has had many interests in his life: photography, woodworking, and hiking, to name a few: “Two summers I spent three months each working with kids or hiking and climbing most all of the high peaks in Switzerland and in Italy and France. Mount Blanc, in France. Mount McKinley, in Alaska. And I have climbed in Mexico and Ecuador. So, that was part of my interest for fifteen or twenty years…And I got into photography and I was very active in that, with large format. I had a wonderful dark room. I did my own printing and had shows--one-man shows. I also exhibited many times in national exhibitions.”

Ambler is part of a long line of conservationists. His famous grandfather, Chase P. Ambler, built a summer home, called the Rattlesnake Lodge, for his family in the mountains above Asheville in 1900. “C.P.” (as he was called) built many buildings around the house including a pool, stables, the caretaker’s cabin, a potato house and a springhouse. In addition to the house and outbuildings, C.P. built many trails: “It was around 1910 that he obtained five hundred dollars, I believe it was, from the board of trade to build a trail from his lodge, from the Bull Gap and his lodge, all the way up to Mt. Mitchell, which is a long way. I don’t know what it is, maybe twenty miles? Well, the five hundred dollars back in 1910 was a lot of money and he could hire people. Then, the going wage he was paying was ten cents an hour, fifteen cents an hour if the man had a horse.” Unfortunately, the lodge burned down in 1928, but the trails and some of the buildings remain to this day: “I remember seeing the remains of the chimneys that were still standing at what we called the shack, which was about a mile up the road, or the trail. And the main chimney was standing and barn still had floorboards, but that was back in the 40’s. As of now, there is very little remaining.” Nonetheless, today there is a sign at Bull Pen Gap commemorating the lodge.

Chase Ambler himself is a member of the Friends of the Blue Ridge Parkway. As a member, he helps to maintain trails along the Blue Ridge Parkway and has worked on many other volunteer projects: “I love it. I will continue to maintain trails, I hope.” Ambler also plans to donate his family’s historical papers to the archives of the Pack Library, where they will be available to scholars and the general public: “There are six or eight binders on my grandfather and Rattlesnake Lodge and our family and the part he played in establishing the Weeks Law and consequently the Great Smokies. There’s a lot in there about him and the Great Smokies. They want them to be put into their permanent collection in the North Carolina Room. So, we’re going to copy what we want, then just give the binders to the Library so at least fifty or a hundred years from now, somebody researching that land or the Amblers will have access to it.”

Chase Ambler works hard to preserve our history, our land and its beauty. With the help of others, this tradition of conservation will continue into the future. More information
